Chromecast is probably the most popular video streaming device of all time. Even though it's a small piece of hardware, it allows you to connect your TV to just about anything else in the house with a processor in it and that includes your Android phone. Chromecast used to be a bit more niche, but it's the most popular streaming stick on the market right now. Most major music and video streaming services come with it by default and, to be honest, lists like this aren't as necessary as before. If it plays noise, there's a very high chance of throwing things to your Chromecast even if it's not on this list. If you have a Chromecast, you'll want to check out the best Chromecast apps for Android. You should already have the Google Home app installed as it functions as a control center and content detection platform for your Chromecast. In addition, Amazon and Google finally made friends and Amazon Prime Video arrived on Chromecast in 2019. Obviously, you should try that if you have Amazon Prime. BubbleUPnP Price: Free/$4.69 BubbleUPnP is an application that allows you to float your media literally all over your home. It is compatible with most current gaming systems, Roku, Chromecast, mobile devices, tablets and more. This means you'll be able to launch your photos, TV shows, movies, and music to virtually any wi-fi connected device in your home. It also comes with cloud support. This means you can launch things from your Google Drive and other platforms to your Chromecast. It's one of Chromecast's must-see apps. You can download it for free to check it out before losing $4.69 for the pro version. Google Photos Price: Free (type of) Google Photos is probably the best cloud storage for photos. The service sends all your photos for free, as long as you don't mind a small dip in quality. Of course, the app also supports Chromecast. You can put your photos on the screen. Plus, you can create collections in Google Photos and use them as a background when you're not releasing anything. I did it personally with a small collection of 4k wallpapers so my TV always looks crispy and beautiful. The app is completely free again, as long as you don't mind a little dip in quality. You can pay for Google Drive space if you want to upload and back up the full-resolution photos you take. Hulu Price: Free trial / $7.99-$11.99 per month / $39.99 per month Hulu is one of the most popular Chromecast apps. It features current and modern TV shows along with some movies. It's also a good place for anime fans. You can put programs on a watch list and stream it to your TV via Chromecast. They also recently launched a TV service for $39.99 per Includes more than 50 channels. The user interface is a bit clumsy, but nothing too serious. The live TV subscription also includes regular hulu content and this makes it a decent bargain. You could definitely do worse. Chromecast support is also excellent. iHeartRadio Price: Free / iHeartRadio is a streaming service per month. It operates a lot like Pandora. There are stations that you can hear that play certain types of music. There are also real radio stations that you can play. Of course, it also has Chromecast support. iHeartRadio is particularly great on holidays, as its holiday seasons are second to none in most cases. It is completely free to use as long as you can tolerate some advertising. It is one of the best Chromecast apps for random music streaming. MediaMonkey Price: Free/$2.49 MediaMonkey is about your best option to launch for Chromecast with your local music. The app supports and does an excellent job, although it doesn't keep the icon on the first page like most others. You have to press the 3-point menu button to find the casting option. Anyway, we really like MediaMonkey. The music app does not have the latest UI elements, but is highly functional. The real deal is desktop client integration that is the closest Android has ever come to an iTunes sync experience. The desktop app also includes streaming support for devices on the same network as well, which may work best in some cases. Anyway, MediaMonkey is pretty powerful as long as you don't care about the older UI. Anywhere Price Movies: Free / Movie prices vary Movies Anywhere is one of the latest Chromecast apps. It's a movie aggregate service. It integrates with Google Play Movies, Amazon, iTunes, Vudu and Disney Anywhere. The application has some bugs. However, it works great most of the time. You purchase a movie on any of the above mentioned services and they are available in this app. This is one of the few ways to launch Amazon content to a Chromecast. It also opens up a bit the movie streaming industry. You can buy sales on any of the above mentioned services and watch it here. The app itself is free. Movies on the various services cost money, obviously. Netflix Price: Free trial / $7.99-$13.99 per month Netflix is definitely one of Chromecast's must-see apps. Everyone knows what Netflix is, what it has and what it costs so there really isn't much new information here. It has been continuously updated and improved over the years and developers have done well with the latest design trends. Streaming is almost flawless as your connection holds. Their selection is among the best and their original schedule is considered in pair with the best out there. It's worth a try, since you can usually get a free trial to sign up. Pandora Music Price: Free / $4.99-$9.99 per month Radio Pandora is one of the most popular Chromecast apps out there. People have been using it for years to discover new music, listen radio stations based on your tastes and more. It's simple, works well, and is compatible with just about anything. This includes Chromecast. Pandora, along with iHeartRadio, are great apps for just playing on TV and jamming for a while. You can pay pay per month to get rid of ads. Alternatively, you'll soon be able to get Pandora Premium for $9.99 per month. This will allow you to stream any music in your library on demand. It's a heavy hitter and it's a must for Chromecast owners. Plex Price: Free / $0.99/$3.99 per month Plex has consistently been one of the best Chromecast apps available. Plex streams video content from your computer almost anywhere. The app allows you to stream from your phone and then directly to Chromecast. It takes a little time to set up because you need a home server on your computer, but it works great once you do. You'll be able to use most features with the free version. However, you will need to fork out a small one-time fee to use the Android app. You can also get Plex Pass for $3.99 per month. This adds more services and features on top of what you can already do. It's powerful and the best way to get video from your computer to your TV without a lot of cables. Addict Price Podcast: Free/$4.49 Podcast Addict is one of the best podcast apps and also has Chromecast support. The user interface is a bit basic, but otherwise it does everything you'd expect a podcast player to do. You can search, track and download over a million different podcasts. In addition, the app works with audiobooks, live streams, YouTube, SoundCloud and radio. Chromecast functionality works as expected and we had no problems using it during our tests. The app is free with ads or $4.49 for the full version. Pocket Casts and Doggycatcher are good alternatives with Chromecast support. Solid Explorer Price: Free/$1.99 Solid Explorer is one of many file explorers out there. However, this one comes with Chromecast support. It's amazing, too. You'll have a material design interface, dual panel support, and all the basic features you'd expect from a file manager. It also supports FTP, SFTP, WebDav, and SMB/CIFS protocols, along with cloud storage support. You can get a 14-day free trial by downloading the app. After that, it's $1.99 to keep it forever. It's a great way to stream your locally stored content and cloud storage content. It is also great for file management. Obviously. Spotify Price: Free with ads / $9.99 per month Spotify took your sweet time to get on the train when it came to Chromecast support. However, it finally did and is now one of the best Chromecast apps out there. The streaming service itself has over 30 million tracks, along with multiple radio stations, video content, podcasts and more. He is currently the king-in-return when it comes to popularity in the streaming business, is compatible with most devices. The $9.99-a-month plan puts you at the door, while the $14.99-a-month plan is their family plan (it supports up to six people). They also offer discounts for college students. Google Play Music is another great music streaming service with Chromecast support. There is a Lite version of this app. Application. not as good as the full version. VRV and Funimation Price: Free / $9.99 per month VRV is one of the newest Chromecast apps. It is a conglomerate of anime and cartoon streaming channels. Some of them include Crunchyroll, HiDive, Rooster Teeth, RiffTrax and Geek & Sundry. The app was quite buggy at launch, but became more stable over time. Chromecast support is very good and we had no problems during testing. This is better than getting an individual subscription to any of these services, although you miss some special rewards for things like Rooster Teeth First or Crunchyroll. This is an excellent video service, especially for anime fans. You can pick up Funimation (also with Chromecast support) and have enough anime to keep you busy for years. YouTube, YouTube Music and Google Play Music Price: Free / $9.99-$12.99 per month The YouTube family is without a doubt the best combination of streaming video and music on the Internet. They also make great Chromecast apps. YouTube has enough content for multiple lives and YouTube Music is a music streaming extension of that. Google Play Music is in the background today, but its Chromecast support is still there and still works fine. Between these three apps, you should be able to find any music you might want to listen to and find some fun and fun video content to go along with it. You can use YouTube for free. The $12.99 per month subscription removes ads, unlocks all features of Google Play Music, and gives you better music support to YouTube. We only want YouTube to focus more on its users than on its ad partners when it comes to promoting content, but you can't win them all. All live TV apps Price: Free/Varies Live TV apps are huge right now. Major competitors include Sling TV, YouTube TV, Hulu, PlayStation Vue and DirecTV Now. We talked about Hulu earlier because it has a binge watch service like Netflix. However, the other four also support Chromecast. There are a variety of options. Sling TV offers an a la carte style, while YouTube TV has a set of channels for a single price. We have a video comparing all five below if you want to see the differences. Their costs vary and their quality varies. However, they all work with your Chromecast. Se we've lost some of the best Chromecast apps for Android, tell us about them in the comments!
